“I went on an expedition to Nepal. I went with family and we had a wonderful trip.” – Mike Reid

We were to help dig a trench from the village to the water source, a distance of more than a mile. We got it started. The first day we had progressed about 100 yards when we saw a long line of people, mostly women walking up from the village. I thought, “Oh good, they’ve brought refreshments!” I was mistaken; they brought picks and shovels and worked shoulder to shoulder with us for the next three days! That made the experience for me. And let me tell you, Nepali women know how to work! In that instant, I understood why this CHOICE model works here and throughout the world.

This was not just CHOICE’s project or my project...it was THEIR project. We were just helping. They will do most of the heavy lifting, it is their project and will benefit their community. We met people from other villages who came to help because they are on the list with CHOICE and they know that their project is coming. Every community in the region belongs, are invested, and participate. That thought and the sight of these people volunteering fueled our efforts and gave meaning to our presence there.

We lived alongside these people in their village and got a glimpse into their everyday lives. It was eye-opening to say the least... especially for my son. I began to see the Nepali people, not for what makes them different, but for the characteristics that we share in common such as love of family and a bind to their faith. They smile easily, love to dance and have a fantastic work ethic.

The only difference I could detect was opportunity, or more accurately the lack of opportunity to pull them out of extreme poverty. That is where CHOICE comes in. To them, CHOICE represents that opportunity to better themselves. Everything else is in place! It was great to be part of their community, even for a week. It changed the way I look at the world.
